You have got some things that are complicated and you don't know much about them. Your tongue is about 10 centimeters long. It is covered with taste buds. These are tiny nerve endings, which enable you to taste your food. Babies are born with taste buds all over their mouths. These gradually disappear as they grow older leaving only those on the tongue. An adult has about 1.000 taste buds.

We can taste our food when saliva, a liquid produced by the mouth, dissolves chemicals in the food and washes them over buds. There are four basic tastes: sweet, sour, salt and bitter. All the taste buds can detect all these tastes to some extent, but different areas of the tongue detect different tastes best.

Sweet tastes such as sugar, are best detected by the taste buds at the tip of the tongue. Salt is detected by those at the front sides of the tongue. The taste buds along the edges at back of the tongue are good at detecting sour tastes, such as lemon, and those on the back of the tongue detect bitter tastes such as coffee. There are no taste buds in the center of the tongue.

The tongue is also used in speaking. The combined action of the tongue, throat, mouth and lips changes the sounds into words.
